Woman SUFFRAGE.

The debate of the question, "Resolved, That suffrage should be extended to woman," was the life of the whole entertainment. The affirmative was advocated by E. R. McCauley and J. J. Bruheck, while the negative—the ungalkant part—was upheld by J. B. Sharitz and E. C. Cronbe. This debate was rendered more interesting from the fact that the "subject" was out, or rather present, in all her force and beauty. The affirmative seemed to play the rôle of mediaval knights and champions, while the negative men clearly betrayed the fact, by the gentleness of their tones and imploring smiles, that they were very affirmatively inclined.
